

Criminal Justice Treatment Account (CJTA)

Overview

The Washington State Health Care Authority (HCA) Division of Behavioral Health and Recovery (DBHR), through appropriations authorized under 71.24.580 RCW- Criminal Justice Treatment Account (CJTA), allocates funds to counties, behavioral health organizations (BHOs)¹, and administrative services organizations (ASOs) for purposes of providing substance use disorder treatment and recovery support services to justice-involved individuals with pending criminal charges or are enrolled in a Therapeutic Court program. A report created by the Department of Social and Health Services Research and Data Analysis (RDA) division surveyed 27 drug courts in Washington State and saw a 61% non-recidivism rate for individuals who participated in Drug Court.² In addition, a multi-site drug court evaluation conducted by the Justice Policy Institute indicated that drug courts produce benefits of over $6,000 for every individual they serve and return as much as $27 for every $1 invested.³

Eligible populations

Funding through the Criminal Justice Treatment Account (CJTA) falls under two categories:

Therapeutic court participants

Therapeutic Courts, as defined under Chapter 2.30 of the Revised Code of Washington (RCW), provide individuals the opportunity to obtain treatment services under a closely monitored diversion program in lieu of the traditional trial track of the criminal justice system. The Washington State Legislature has indicated that therapeutic courts may decrease recidivism, improve the safety of the community, and improve the life of the program participant.

Individuals with pending criminal charges

An individual may also receive CJTA-funded services outside of a therapeutic court environment. The county, through the input of a local CJTA panel, can implement services under a local arrangement to treat legally involved individuals that are not enrolled in a therapeutic court program. These arrangements coordinate treatment services for individuals who have charges filed by a county prosecutor and meet the eligibility requirements indicated in 71.24.580.

CJTA funding may be used to provide substance use disorder (SUD) treatment in the community or in a county or regional jail, including:

Costs and numbers served

- For SFY 2018, 3,775 offenders received alcohol and drug treatment services via CJTA.
- The benefit-cost ratio for Washington State Drug Court is estimated to be approximately $4 in benefits for every $1 spent.^{4,5}
- Sixty-one percent of Drug Court participants remain free of a new criminal conviction within 36 months after starting treatment.⁶
- There is a cost-benefit of $7 for every dollar spent on recovery support services for drug court participants.⁷

Partners

Statewide partnerships include:

- The State Criminal Justice Treatment Account Panel, that develops the distribution formula and policy recommendation for CJTA funds
- Residential and outpatient providers to provide services under the county's local CJTA plan
- Drug Courts, and other Therapeutic Courts, for monitoring offenders receiving treatment services
- DSHS Research and Data Analysis for Drug Court data collection, program monitoring, and evaluation
- Washington State Association of Drug Court Professionals
- Washington State Association of Counties
- Washington State Association of Sheriffs and Police Chiefs

BHOs/ASOs and counties assume the authority, in cooperation with DBHR, for purposes of local planning and implementation of county CJTA plans. This is done in cooperation with each county's local criminal justice planning process.

Oversight

The Health Care Authority contracts with BHOs/ASOs and counties that, in turn, subcontract with providers. Each region provides oversight in accordance with their contract as the contract managers. DBHR staff often provide technical assistance to individual providers and counties.
